

SILGAN PROFILES OF SUCCESS

CHARLES BECKER

Management Trainee

Chuck started with Silgan Menomonie in March of 2007 after his enlistment with the Marines was over. He began as a 3pc Welder mechanic, transitioned and learned the 2pc lines before eventually becoming a conversion press mechanic. Chuck is now working as a management trainee, training to become a supervisor. On his off days Chuck likes to take his wife and son to the Minneapolis/St. Paul area to eat dinner and shop. He also spends time at the shooting range and building scale model military vehicles.

ERIC KROLL

Facility Supervisor

Eric started with Silgan in June of 2003 while he was attending Menomonie's University of Wisconsin-Stout. He started as a part time employee sorting defective product before obtaining an internship with Silgan. After the internship Eric became a Management Trainee and then a Supervisor. Outside of work Eric enjoys hunting and fishing and the company of his wife and two kids.

ABOUT SILGAN

We are the Leading Manufacturer of Metal Food Containers

The Menomonie Wisconsin Silgan facility was acquired by Silgan Containers in 1993 from Northern Can System. This plant was originally built as Howington in 1986.

Silgan Menomonie produces three different types of products within the containers business. We produce aluminum and steel 2-piece draw redraw cans, 3-piece welded can and steel and aluminum converted ends.

There are approximately 100 employees working at the Silgan Menomonie facility, with 90 or more full time.

IN & AROUND MENOMONIE

Menomonie was ranked #15 of the Best Small Towns in America

Named for the historic Native American tribe, the Menominee, inhabitants who pre-dated the state. In 1788, French-Canadian fur trader and schoolmaster Jean Baptiste Perrault established a trading post and fort on the Red Cedar River very near Menomonie and in 1882 it was incorporated as a city.

The City of Menomonie has a population of over 16,000. It is just 20 miles down the road from Eau Claire (population 65,000) and Wisconsin's 9th largest city. Menomonie is also an hour away from the Minneapolis/St. Paul Metro area which includes an International Airport.

Both Menomonie and Eau Claire have public Universities and Technical Colleges to support greater education. Menomonie ranked #15 best small towns in America in 2012 and Eau Claire ranked as one of the best 100 communities for young people.
